AT&T Local Service Deregulation

In October 2014, AT&T local service was deregulated in Texas.

The Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUC) still helps AT&T customers resolve:

1. Slamming and cramming complaints;
2. Deposit issues;
3. Billing issues (except billing adjustments for service quality issues);
4. Disconnection of service complaints;
5. Certain required disclosures to customers;
6. Certain customer choice issues; and
7. Continuity of service during processing of a bona fide complaint on one of these issues.

What does “deregulated” mean?

As a deregulated company, AT&T is no longer:

1. subject to PUC rules governing pricing and service quality;
2. obligated to provide service to customers; and
3. required to file their rates and tariffs with the PUC.

Does this affect my AT&T Uverse or AT&T wireless service?

No, this deregulation only applies to AT&T’s “wired” phone services in Texas, but...

The PUC has never had jurisdiction over complaints about AT&T’s U-verse or Wireless services. Complaints on those must be directed either to the Federal Communications Commission or to the courts.

Competition instead of regulation

Texas law permits certain incumbent local exchange carriers (ILECs) like AT&T to petition the PUC to deregulate local service areas if at least two competitors provide service in a given local area, or “exchange.” AT&T petitioned the PUC and it found that AT&T met the two-competitor test under Texas law in all of its exchanges.
